Ty Newydd
Country Hotel

The Ty Newydd Country Hotel is set at the end of a lengthy drive off the A4059 on the edge of the brecon beacons national park.

the house was originally built by the coal baron, william llewellyn, the uncle of olympic show jumping gold medalist sir harry llewellyn, who trained his horse ''foxhunter'' here.

the detatched property was constructed in the 1930's as a private house. The main building is of neo - georgian style with rendered elevations under slate covered roofs and is aranged over two floors. The bedroom wings and function rooms were added in 1989 and 1991 and more recently conservatory extentions have also been added to the side and rear of the building.

The tynewydd is now a busy country hotel, and is particulary popular as a quality choice for weddings, anniversaries and special occasions.

the 28 en-suite bedrooms are complimented by the elegant foxhunter suite with its adjoining olympic bar, caradoc's our newly referbished restaurant serving freshly prepared locally sourced food, the residents bar with the three quater height oak paneling and residents lounge with a log burning stove.

The grounds extend to four acres, with magnificent views of the brecon beacons and neath valley, and provide ample parking for coaches and larger functions.

But there's more to us than other hotels you may have visited. Stay with us, and you'll feel as though you are staying with friends.
